TANGENT daily

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 22, 2026
ISSUE 22

BUSINESS NOTE

Delegating the Busywork to an Agent

Ethan Mollick, a professor at the Wharton School, writes in One Useful Thing that the gap between his two books on artificial intelligence shows how much the tools have changed. Where he once guided a chatbot step by step, he now hands a single orchestrator agent a few sentences of direction and lets it spin off the research, charts, and layouts on its own.

The same delegation suits the production side of a small shop. A seller planning a printable planner could give an agent the month, the niche, and the page list, then ask for several layout options before choosing one to refine by hand. Treat the first pass as a batch of drafts, and keep the judgment about what a buyer actually wants.

Source: One Useful Thing, 30 Months on the Exponential (in Charts)
https://www.oneusefulthing.org/p/30-months-on-the-exponential-in-charts